

Making this website accessible was very difficult. Because the interface changes so much I was unsure how to make every image have alt text and use event handlers. I tried to add alt text and handlers where I could but in the end it didn't help that much since everything changes when you search for different artists. I don't think this website is easily functional without the use of a mouse because selecting the different options on the pages is not easy. This made me want to learn more about accessibility features because the idea of making a website like spotify fully accessible seems really complex and I'm interested in how they do it. I want to know how websites are made accessible when their elements are constantly changing the way spotify's do.
